

PILLSBURY THE WINNER.

THE BOSTON BOY TAKES FIRST PRIZE IN THE CHESS MASTERS' JOURNEY.

Beautiful Play on the Part of D. G. Barto
Upset Hedges' Chances for First
Honors—Able Was in Poor Form—J.
W. Baird Nicely Disposed of by Hali-pern—Showalter Wins Up in Third Place.

The chess masters' tournament was successfully concluded at the Manhattan Café yesterday, when Harry N. Pillsbury of Boston won the first prize, while A. B. Hedges of State Island, J. W. Showalter of Kentucky, and Adolf Albin of Vienna took the remaining prizes in this order named.

The winner was born at Somerville, Mass., on Dec. 5, 1873. At the age of 10 he commenced to play chess, and by hard work and study soon managed to become a strong member of the Boston Chess Club. This is the first time, however, that he has won an event of importance. In off-hand games his victories have been as follows: Against Walbradt, won 2, lost 0, drew 1; against Schottlander, won 2, lost 0, drew 1. He also beat Champion Steinitz in two games out of three. Steinitz conceding to the young player the odds of pawn and move. Within these last two years Pillsbury became known as a clever simultaneous and blindfold expert.

HARRY N. PILLSBURY.

There were only three games played last night, on board No. 1. Albin opened with K-K 3 (Zukertort Opening), against Pillsbury, who managed to outplay his opponent in the middle game. Albin had to resign after forty-two moves.

D. G. Baird essayed a Ruy Lopez upon Hedges, the latter defending with the Steinitz move S-P-Q 3. In some manner Baird made a pretty good attack by a well-timed advance of his knight, which won him the file, and finally succeeded in forcing both to rooks and king. White, however, did not take the exchange, but proceeded with his attack by bringing his rook to the d-file, and so on above. The State Island coach had a hopeless case before him, and after a struggle of fifteen moves, had to resign.

Hedges, with W. Baird in a Guineo Piano after forty-one moves. The city champion conducted the game very cleverly.

In the afternoon the tournament gave to a SUN reporter the forecast of the tournament in a sealed envelope at the beginning of the contest. When the envelope was opened last night it contained the following directions:

Pillsbury, first prize; Hedges, second prize;

Showalter, third prize.

The score of the final round:

TABLE NO. 1—ZUKERTORT OPENING.
Albin	Pillsbury
White	Black
K-K 3	S-P-Q 3
P-K-B 4	P-K 4
K-K 4	P-K 4
P-Q 4	P-Q 4
K-K 5	P-K 5
K-K 6	P-K 6
K-K 7	P-K 7
K-K 8	P-K 8
K-K 9	P-K 9
K-K 10	P-K 10
K-K 11	P-K 11
K-K 12	P-K 12
K-K 13	P-K 13
K-K 14	P-K 14
K-K 15	P-K 15
K-K 16	P-K 16
K-K 17	P-K 17
K-K 18	P-K 18
K-K 19	P-K 19
K-K 20	P-K 20
K-K 21	P-K 21
K-K 22	P-K 22
K-K 23	P-K 23

News from the Horse World.

The Washington Park Racing Association of Chicago has added $1,000 to their stakes, which close on Jan. 2.

The bay mare Clara D. 2,142 recently purchased in Kentucky by R. C. Conner of this city, is the fastest of the trotting set of Alexander Belmont.

The Bay State Club recently presented to Robert H. Parker, president of the Boston Driving Club, in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

Among those in the church were Robert E. Perry, Hugh D. Melville, G. Cornelius, Jr., George L. Nichols, F. C. Wright, W. H. Garrison, Charles Dwyer, James Dwyer, Benjamin Brush, Frank McCabe, Harry McCormick, J. N. Kirk, John Dillon, Edward McGinn, L. N. Salmon, and John Kearl.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., was the only son and part-owner of the late Philip Dwyer, a member of the Brooklyn Hockey Club in the racing division, and went to California in November in the hope that the climate there would stave off the ravages of consumption, from which he had suffered for some time past. He had been unable to leave the city, and he failed steadily, passing away at Los Angeles as peacefully as those in the room whom he slept. The dead boy was loved by all, and his death was a loss to the community.

The prospects for another strong crew at Cornell next year look bright just at present, if we may judge by the record of the men who have not begun training; but directly after the holidays the candidates will be gathered together and the real work will begin.

PHILIP DWYER, JR.

Philip Dwyer, Jr., who died at Los Angeles on Friday, Dec. 15, was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery, Flushing, yesterday. Services were held in the Church of St. Augustine, corner of Sterling place and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, after his friends had viewed his remains at his residence, 8 Eighth avenue.